named Avnix – so called because Avnit means limescale in Hebrew, and X crosses that limescale right off. Very clever Waterpath! Anyway we bless that ship and all the goods that sail in her.

New Distributor in Eire

Welcome Simply Water as our most recent Hydropath distributor. Simply Water has been developing water filtration systems since 1989. Managing director, Adrian Hamilton, has a strong commitment to the environment, having served on the council of Earthwatch/FOE Irl for a number of years and has done Environmental Studies at the Open University.

Adrian Hamilton writes It is not surprising therefore that the systems now used are designed to have as small an environmental footprint as possible. With very 'green' water softeners that use no electricity or chemicals coming on stream, Simply Water was seeking a water conditioner that would fit in with this range of limescale treatment products.

The company had experience of a top model magnetic conditioner in the 1990s. This product used ceramic magnets and could produce good results... when it worked. Experience gained with this product made the company aware that if problems could be overcome, conditioners would be an environmentally acceptable and economic way to deal with limescale.

A visit to Hydropath Holdings convinced the company that Hydropath has the first and only really successful water conditioner technology. What is so exciting is that there is a whole range of conditioners so that a new and very large market opens up with niches such as the dairy industry, health, leisure & hotels, food processing companies, fish farming and aquaculture etc. The list is extensive.

Simply Water is delighted to be working with Hydropath Holdings and looks forward to a long and successful partnership with them.

Aquatech - did you see us?

Hydropath exhibit every other year at the International Water and Wastewater exhibition in Amsterdam. This year, along with featuring all our product ranges, the Aquagraphics water feature which shows images and words through the formation of water droplets was a real crowd pleaser. Hydropath distributors from around the world travelled to the Hydropath Conference 2008. Over two evenings we discussed many topics including technical developments and applications.
